An Epiphany of Love

By : sdavis8966

A homeless man discovers love

Published on Booksie

booksie.com/sdavis8966

Copyright © sdavis8966, 2015
Publish your writing on Booksie.com.

An Epiphany of Love

I stood looking intently into the night sky. An ocean of stars were dancing in the atmosphere like the restless waves of the sea. My heart matched itsâ restlessness as I pondered the events of the day. I had been looking for work, desperate to find a home of my own. As for now I lived on the sand of the beach with the sounds of the ocean my only companion. As I pondered I felt something cold nuzzle against my hand. It was a small dog who like I was lost in the world. I petted itsâ unkempt fur and felt pity not only for it but for myself. I began to feed it the food I had managed to gain from a nearby dumpster and felt satisfaction at itsâ appreciation of my gesture. I lay down then in the sand and the small dog lay down beside me. Suddenly an epiphany tossed in my mind like the wind did my hair. Life wasnâ t about work or lack thereof or even having a home, it was about love; even the love of a small dog. How easily I had gained itsâ love for me, giving it only a few morsels of food. I had, through love, saved itsâ life. I had performed what to that dog was a miracle. As I again gazed up into the starry night I felt full and satisfied for the first time for many days. Yes, if one had love he inherited the entire universe. I then fell asleep, visions of miracles dancing through my dreams.

Created from Booksie.com

Generated: 2015-09-02 23:43:16