Mary Magdalene Interview

It's Harlowe Pilgrim again, back with another interview. This time we're speaking with Mary Magdalene - also known as Mrs. Jesus Christ - one of the big stars of my book, Jesus Vs. Santa.

Pilgrim: Mary Magdalene, lovely star of the written word, thank you for joining me to discuss our new book, Jesus Vs. Santa.

Magdalene: You're welcome, Harlowe. And you look lovely today, as well.

Pilgrim: Aw, you're too kind. So, how's it feel being done with the book?

Magdalene: Well, first of all, I'm very happy that you turned our work into something so worthwhile.

Pilgrim: Hmm worthwhile, huh? Interesting choice of words. I wonder what exactly you mean by that.

Magdalene: Well, I mean laugh-your-ass-off funny, piss-your-pants exciting, and so provocative you'll want to discuss it with all your friends. And or your shrink.

Pilgrim: All good qualities in a book, I think. Very worthwhile.

Magdalene: Exactly. Anyhow, I actually have mixed feelings about the book being done. It was a lot of work, but doing it was so much fun. And it was great for my husband Jesus to have something constructive to do with his time.

Pilgrim: I'd be surprised to learn that Jesus has a hard time keeping busy.

Magdalene: Yeah, but keeping busy doing what? I'll give you an example of how he's been entertaining himself lately: The other day, he gave me a second pair of tits on my back. And then he followed me around trying to play with them the entire damn day.

Pilgrim: (laughs) I suppose that could get obnoxious after a while.

Magdalene: You think? Just this morning, an angel came to see him, and the poor guy left with a penis stuck on his forehead. And believe me it was not the way the angel was used to having them stuck to his forehead, either.

Pilgrim: (laughs) Good thing we're gearing up for another book, then.

Magdalene: It's a godsend. Really, you have no idea.

Pilgrim: I think we're starting to get some idea. Back to making Jesus Vs. Santa, tell me what was your favorite part.

Magdalene: I really liked the way we got to play ourselves as ourselves.

Pilgrim: Interesting. That's been a pretty consistent response from all the cast members.

Magdalene: I can totally see why. Although the story was, of course (mostly) made up, the novel could really be a documentary, as far as how our personalities are depicted. What you read is what you get. You did a really great job capturing my essence, Harlowe.

Pilgrim: And you did a great job being yourself. (both laugh)

Magdalene: I may be the best at it there is.

Pilgrim: I've never seen anyone play you better.

Magdalene: Thank you so much. And my other favorite part was working with Jess and Kris they're really a lot of fun.

Pilgrim: That's Jessica and Kris Kringle, or Mrs. and Santa Claus, for anyone who's not yet on a first name basis with them.

Magdalene: Right, and I have to say those fucking elves just crack me up every time! Whenever we visit The North Pole, I end up leaving with sore sides from all the laughing.

Pilgrim: They are funny. It was a brilliant idea to include them in the book.

Magdalene: Yes, chalk up another brilliant idea to Harlowe Pilgrim a goddamned genius, if you ask me. And so handsome.

Pilgrim: Geez, am I blushing?

Magdalene: Maybe a little. No, maybe a lot.

Mary Magdalene Interview

Pilgrim: Uh hum â€¦ okay, so â€¦ what was your least favorite part of being in the book? Was there anything you didnâ€™t like?

Magdalene: Well, I wasnâ€™t really sure about the nudity and crude sexual humor at first. I mean, history and the church give me a pretty bad time as it is, you know?

Pilgrim: Yeah, I can understand your having some reservations. What's their problem, anyway? Do you have any thoughts on it?

Magdalene: Well, theyâ€™re heavily invested in a certain image of Jesus, and I guess theyâ€™ve just always thought I was bad for business.

Pilgrim: Wow, thatâ€™s rough.

Magdalene: Yeah, but itâ€™s ancient history. Actually, it is ancient history, now that I think about it. Besides, I got the â€¦ prize?

Pilgrim: I guess you did.

Magdalene: And my in-laws have always been great to me. Who elseâ€™s blessing would I need?

Pilgrim: Iâ€™m glad to hear youâ€™ve come to terms with all that, and Iâ€™m really glad you came around on the nudity and crude sexual humorâ€¦ it helped make the book. You have a beautiful body to show off, if you donâ€™t mind me saying so.

Magdalene: I sort of have my husband to thank for that; Jesus Christ has definitely been my personal savior in the cosmetic augmentation department. Gosh, imagine if I looked my age.

Pilgrim: I think you and Mrs. Claus are kind of in the same boat, there.

Magdalene: Yeah, Iâ€™d say sheâ€™s been taken very good care of. Jessica Kringle knows Santa Claus is for real, let me tell you.

Pilgrim: I bet she does. And I understand that she and Santa are also participating in the next book.

Magdalene: You would know! We were all just talking about how excited we are.

Pilgrim: So, I take it youâ€™ve signed on for more nudity and crude sexual humor?

Magdalene: Iâ€™m a little worried about being typecastâ€¦ but yeah, Iâ€™ll be taking my clothes off again in the name of fine literature.

Pilgrim: (laughs) Why mess with success, right? Iâ€™ve heard that sex sells â€¦ and a little salty language never hurt, either.

Magdalene: If you fucking say so, Harlowe. (both laugh)

Pilgrim: I fucking do. And do you have any parting words for our fucking readers?

Magdalene: (laughs) Um â€¦ okay. Girls, marry a guy who can give you anything you want. And guys â€¦ better do what you can to be that guy.

Pilgrim: Great advice if you can follow it, Mary Magdalene. Thanks again for the interview, and see you on the set.
