Final Beachcombing from the Halling Valley River 1

1. Bouzingo The Gathering of the Poets

The boy was aged about eighteen,
Pale and pensive,
Weary and frail in appearance.
He could have been
Goethe's Werther,
Senancour's Obermann
Or Chateaubriand's melancholy hero,
Embraced by a generation
And about whom Sainte Beuve said:
" Ren , c'est moi.
Tortured by a new mal du si cle,
He sought refuge
In the Club Bouzingo.
Two young poets,
One dark, the other fair,
Drifted past. The first,
Whose black hair
Hung in ringlets over his shoulders,
Wore a small pointed beard,
Black velvet tails,
A white linen shirt
Loosely fastened at the neck
By a thin pink taffeta tie;
The second wore a tight coat
That opened onto a silk crimson waistcoat
And a lace jabot, white trousers
With blue seams,
And a wide-brimmed black hat, and
In one of his hands
He carried a long thin pink-coloured pipe.
They were soon joined
By some of their dandified companions.
The music had stopped playing, and
The poet-leader in cape and gloves,
Dark and pomaded
With a Th ophile Gautier moustache,
Took to the stage,
Where he proceeded to declaim
Selections from his subversive verses
To delirious cheers,
As if sedition was imminent;
Only the boy-poet remained silent,
His pale cheeks
Soaked by the freshest tears.

He said under his breath,
â Our leader preaches revolution
But provides no solution
As to the fate of coming generations,
Should the infant be cast out
With the bath water that is so filthy
In his sight
That, intent on doing right,
Gives no thought to the future,
Nor to what might supplant
The society he claims to despise.â

2. Oh My My My (Call the FBI)

Couldnât believe my peepers
When I first saw you
Couldnât believe the beauty
Of your baby blues
I knew I had to ask you if youâd
Like to dance
I knew I had to take heart and to Take that chance

First you resisted me you said
You couldnât leave
Your friends alone
But after our first dance you said
You thought they would be Ok to find their own way home

Oh my my my
Call the FBI
I think I lost my pride
I think I found my bride

Couldnât believe Iâd ever
Find a girl like you
Couldnât believe weâd bond

Final Beachcombing from the Halling Valley River 1

As if by superglue
I knew I had such tender feelings
In my heart
I knew that I could fix it so weâd
Never part

First you resisted me you said
You werenât ready
To fall in love
But after our first dance you said
You thought youâd give
This crazy swain another chance

Oh my my my
Call the FBI
I think I lost my pride
I think I found my bride

3. Some Romantic Afternoon

Some Romantic Afternoon
I will hear that haunting tune
The one that I would softly croon
By a lagoon

Weâd go sailing to Cadiz
For a while it seemed like bliss
Now it all seems just a myth
Like Brigadoon

Took a boat to southern Spain
Just to see her face again
She had gone forever
Not to return there
I could not control the tears
How they burned my eyes
As I lookâd back at those lost years

Some Romantic Afternoon
I will hear that haunting tune
The one that I would softly croon
By a lagoon

4. For More than a Million Dreams

Keep on chipping
Right away at my heart
Because you touched it
Right from the start
If you were to leave me
And then

Final Beachcombing from the Halling Valley River 1

We were to part
It would really tear me apart

Donâ t stop now,
Darling youâ re getting to me
Donâ t quit now
That youâ re ahead
Donâ t stop now
Youâ ve made an impression on me
Now thereâ s no getting you out of my head.

Keep on tearing
All my defences down
Because I feel that Theyâ re all going to fall
Keep on keeping up with
All of your charms
Because I feel
Iâ m going to give you my all

Donâ t stop now,
You lit such a fire in me
Donâ t quit now
Because that would be cruel
Donâ t stop now
Darling, donâ t tire of me
Iâ d feel such a fool and so confused

Youâ re the one
I have longed for you
For more than a million dreams
Youâ re the one
I have been strong for you
You donâ t know how hard itâ s been

Donâ t stop now,
Darling youâ re getting to me
Donâ t quit now
That youâ re ahead
Donâ t stop now

5. Melancholy Girl

Melancholy Girl,
With your pre-Raphaelite curls
You don't seem quite of this world
Such a strange and a sad-eyed girl

What happened to your smile
How came you to be so full of guile
Your eyes seem to stare for miles

Final Beachcombing from the Halling Valley River 1

For such a sweet and a tender child

There's someone you've got to meet

The truth can set you free

Eternally

Enigmatic babe

The way you live is a shame

Life is more than a game

Freedom's found in just one name

I'd like to show you another way

Where the dark can't harm you

Night or day

Melancholy Girl,

With your pre-Raphaelite curls

You don't seem quite of this world

Such a strange and a sad-eyed girl

6. My Travels

My travels start

Right here

Deep in my mind

My travels take me just where

I please I don't have

To leave my warm room

My travels start

Sixteen sun

Beating down

Sinatra's crooning Jobim

And I'm just dreaming of my Great romance to come

I don't need a little ticket

Tells me I can take the train

I don't even to risk it

There's no blistering sun

Or driving rain

And it's here that I remain

My travels end

With a sweet

And peaceful time

I've found such sense deep within

No more will I feel

The need to go travelling again.

7. Some Sun Drunk Day He Said

Final Beachcombing from the Halling Valley River 1

Emotions war against sense
And his mind remains
A pot pourri
And thoughts in his head
When he lies in his bed
Would make Dorian Gray
Appear pristine
He wishes to moralize
On a corrupt example
Yet from the wicked cup
He hath supped a sample.

He appears to think in extremes
He is beau-laid and realist
Whose inspiration stems from his dreams.
â Life is a beautiful strain for meâ ,
One sun-drunk day he said
But I pray I say what my soul needs to Before the heavens decide me dead.
But his mind is a disorderly drawer
Full of confused categorizations
He has that Scott Fitzgerald illness
For dates, times, rhymes and quotations.
â I have a clear flowing mind but I cannot foretell
When the clogging black clouds will arrive
For they will arrive
Live with the love, then bear the pain
Recurrent like the monsoon rain.

He is afraid of happiness
For the inevitable despair that must follow it
Afraid of happiness
For its cruel impermanence
Like Zola, the seasons in life, for him
Are inevitable.
â All artists,â he says, â are at once alike and unique
One day, itâs clear,
The next, hazy, like a beery vision
The fulfilment that they seek.
Misty dreams of sweet-smelling roses
And swaying streams
Bring him chills and pains in his soul and being.
He lives his life through a melancholy tragedy
And has an ever-yearning mind.

8. Gallant Festivities

It was my evening, thatâs
For sure
â Itâs your auraâ lâ

For sure -
At last Iâ€™m good
At something â€™ Spot the Equity cardâ€™ Iâ€™ â€™ When are you going

Of herself in the eyes
Of others...
There is no June
To grasp and knowâ€™ Iâ€™

I kept getting up to danceâ€™ Iâ€™
Sally said: â€™ Iâ€™m afraidâ€™ Iâ€™
Youâ€™re inscrutable
Youâ€™re not just Blasphemy,
Are you?â€™
I spoke
Of the spells of calm
And the hysterical

9. The Wanderer of Golders Green

I awake each morning

With fresh hope

And tranquility

I might go for a saunter

Down quiet London backstreets

Soon my aimlessness

Depresses me,

And I realise

I'd been deceiving myself

As to my ability

To relax as others do.

I decided on a Special B

Before the eve.

I bought a lager

At the Bar

And chatted to Gaye.

Then Ray

Bought me another.

I appreciated the fact

That he remembered

The time he,

His gal Chris,

And Rory Downed

An entire Bottle

Of Jack Daniels

In a Paris-bound train.

A tanned cat

Bought me a (large) half,

Then another half.

My fatal eyes

Are my downfall.

I drank yet another half...

My head was spinning

When it hit the pillow

I awoke

With a terrible headache

Around one o'clock.

I prayed it would depart.

I slowly got dressed.

I was as chatty as ever

Before the exam...

French/English translation.

Final Beachcombing from the Halling Valley River 1

Periodically I put my face
In my hands or groaned
Or sighed -
My stomach was burning me inside.

I finished my paper
In 1 hour and a half.
As I walked out
I caught various eyes
Amanda's, Trudy's (quizzical) etc. !
I went to bed !
Slept till five !
Read O'Neill until 7ish...
Got dressed
And strolled down
To Golders Green,
In order to relive
A few memories.
I sang to myself -
A few memories
Flashed into my mind,
But not as many as I'd have liked -
It wasn't the same.
It wasn't the same.

Singing songs brought Voluptuous tears.
I snuck into McDonalds
Where I felt At home,
Anonymous, alone.
I bought a few things,
Toothpaste and pick,
Chocolate, yoghurts,
Sweets, cigarettes
And fruit juice.
Took a sentimental journey
Back to Powis Gardens, Richness
And intensity,
Romantic
And attractive !
Sad, suspicious and strange.
I sat up until 3am,
Reading O'Neill
Or writing (inept) poetry.
Awoke at 10,
But didn't leave
My room till 12,
Lost my way

Final Beachcombing from the Halling Valley River 1

To Swiss Cottage,
Lost my happiness.
Oh so conscious
Of my failure
And after a fashion,
Enjoying this knowledge.

9. So That it Remain Perpetually Inchoate

Introduction

The following explanation of how Where the Halling Valley River Lies came to be written is going to be a lengthy and labyrinthine descent, and for one reason or another, you may be loath to undertake it. For example, you may seek to keep its mystique intact. On the other hand, you may not be remotely interested in how it came to be written, or anything else about it for that matter. In which case, I strongly urge you stop reading now.

We begin with the leading text from Book One, Leitmotifs from an English Pastorale. For its nucleus came about some years ago when I attempted to write a piece about the pastoral tradition within English music, before realising I'd set myself a monumental task. But I rambled on regardless, only to lose what I'd written so far when my computer crashed beyond all hope of repair.

Having failed to make any kind of back-up copy, I think I then attempted a re-write featuring the singer-songwriter Nick Drake, with a few references to English pastoral pieces such as the much-loved A Lark Ascending by Vaughan Williams.

Ultimately it was given the title From an English Pastorale For Nick Drake, but it was only intended as a makeweight. That is, until I decided to expand on it, and what you have just read or not as the case may be was the result.

It effectively wrote itself, and I can't even recall why I decided to include the leitmotifs which are one of its features. Leitmotifs or recurring themes being of course originally used in music rather than in writing, although ultimately co-opted by literature. It's a fairly lawless affair, which is what the French writer André Gide proposed a novel should be, although of course it's not a novel, and Gide's shorter works were far from lawless.

It's based on fact, and predictably so for anyone who's in any way familiar with what I optimistically like to call my writings. And as such, it's partly original, and partly based on an increasingly complex network of autobiographical works I've been concocting since 2006, when I started writing seriously for the first time. Which is to say, with the intention of preserving them.

But it's not a memoir as such, at least, not as I see it, but then in the end, it's not up to me to say what it is. In fact when all's said and done, I haven't the first idea what it is other than something I wrote. But by naming the central figure Runacles, I'm able to distance myself a little from him, so that Runacles is a version of me as opposed to the completed article.

And so we move on to the quartet of essays that complete Book One, A Quartet of Essays and a Stray Pastorale.

The first of these, The Coming of the Absaloms was fashioned from an early section of The Gambolling Baby Boomer, first chapter of my memoir Rescue of a Rock and Roll Child. Or rather memoirs, for it exists in two versions, one a direct memoir, the other, similarly direct, but with many names changed.

And while it's since been considerably enhanced, the similarities yet very much remain. While the second was derived from another chapter from Rescue, The Triumph of Decadence.

As to the third, it was based on a chapter from the original version of Travails of a Contemporary

Final Beachcombing from the Halling Valley River 1

Creatorâ called â The Riddle of the British Englishâ , which while still available online has to all intents and purposes been shelved.

While the source of the fifth, â From Avant Garde to Global Villageâ , was â A Final Distant Clarion Cryâ , final chapter of the aforesaid â Rescue of a Rock and Roll Childâ , more of which later.

Which brings us to Book Two, â Your Lethal Life and Other Versified Leftoversâ which as the name suggests consists exclusively of versified writings. And these begin with â It Wasnâ t So Long Agoâ , a lyric written in 2003 for a song I roughly recorded onto cassette, before being transferred onto CD. And thence onto YouTube, together with â Toilers of the Seaâ , â A Song of Summerâ , â Stevie B and Meâ , â The Ones We Loveâ , â Like All the Moonstruck Doâ , â I Let You Goâ and â Time Was I Wasâ . While â Time Travelâ was written and recorded in â 99; with â All Through the Agesâ emerging perhaps a year later, while never making it onto CD.

As to â Your Beautiful Lethal Lifeâ , it was written only a matter of weeks ago from an earlier lyric Iâ d based on a collaboration with my close friend Mark, dating from about twenty years ago.

â Wicked Cahootsâ and â The Woodville Hall Soul Boysâ are both based on stories written in the late 1970s, and first saw the light of day in versified form in 2006, before going on to form part of the memoir which came ultimately to be titled â Rescue of a Rock and Roll Childâ .

While â Thoughts of a Forlorn FLÃneurâ is based partly on a story written in about 1987, and subsequently destroyed, and partly on material written specifically for what became â Rescueâ . And in its present form, is relatively new.

â Spark of Youth Long Goneâ , â Some Perverse Willâ and â London as the Lieuâ all also date from the â 80s. Indeed â Londonâ first existed in prose form as part of the same story that inspired parts of â FLÃneurâ ; while â Sparkâ pertained to a different tale entirely, and â Some Perverse Willâ existed in versified form from the outset. Although itâ s since undergone some modification, like so much of what has ended up being included in â Where the Halling Valley River Liesâ . In fact, itâ s hard to keep track of the constant mutations.

But letâ s now move on from â Your Lethal Lifeâ to Book Three, â Seven Chapters from a Sad Sack Loserâ s Lifeâ in all its convoluted complexity. So where do its origins lie?

Well, originally in the memoir, â Rescue of a Rock and Roll Childâ which still exists as its kernel, with endless layers having been subsequently added to it. For out of â Rescueâ came two kindred pieces, â The Tormenting of David Christiansenâ , which was â Rescueâ told in the third person with all names changed, verse removed, and dialogue added. And â The Testimony of David Christiansenâ , which was like â Tormentingâ , only even more bowlderised, if that were at all possible. For â Rescueâ was itself a highly sweetened version of actual events.

And â Sad Sackâ is effectively â The Tormentingâ , with elements of â The Testimonyâ added to it. Such as several autobiographical narratives which, as a result of being deemed ineffectual as short stories, were shelved along with both longer works. While â Rescueâ was relegated to what might be called a second team of writings.

Which is where Book Four, â Travails of a Contemporary Creatorâ once existed, that is, until it was recently upgraded and completed. But its evolution was even more labyrinthine than that of â Sad Sackâ . What is certain is that it first emerged in the wake of â Rescueâ as a second volume of memoirs, only to vanish from the writing site Iâ d initially used to store it, without the safety net of a back-up copy.

With the result that I was forced to re-write it, so that it came into being in embryonic form in the shape of a diversity of writings bearing titles such as â Tales from the Halling Valleyâ , â The Tragedy of Phyllis Pinnockâ , â The Ascent of Miss Ann Wattâ , â Patrick Hallingâ s Musical Voyageâ , â The Riddle of the British Englishâ , â The Leviathan of Glamâ and so on. And some or all of these are still available to read online.

Although â Travailsâ was ultimately fine-tuned in order that it centre on my father, Patrick Halling, as well as the successive musical and cultural climates in which his career took place. While many, perhaps most of the elements pertaining to myself would be destined to end up in â Sad Sackâ .

Which brings us to the â Final Beachcombing from the Halling Valley Riverâ , of which this finale is an integral part, together with versified pieces not considered of sufficiently high quality to be included in â Lethal Lifeâ .

And which begin with â Bouzingo â The Gathering of the Poetsâ , whose origins lie in an unfinished story possibly written in about 1979. While â Call the FBIâ , â Some Romantic Afternoonâ , â For More than a Million Dreamsâ , â Melancholy Girlsâ and â My Travelsâ were all originally song lyrics dating from 2003.

With the present piece finishing things off in June 2011. Although thatâ s not to say that â Where the Halling Valley Riverâ has attained its definitive state, because by its very nature, it can be added to ad infinitum. So that it remain perpetually inchoate.
