A Letter to Nobody

6, Demetrio Street

11th December, 2012

Dear Nobody,

I am writing to tell you how your existence matters to me. This letter may be a little confusing, but evidently, itâs the truth.

It has always been that if there is nonentity around, then you are. That is so partial. You are supposed to be alone, always. Is that fair at all? Not a soul, they say, then why do you exist? If there is not a beating heart, then you subsist. If there is some living creature around, then you arenât alive.

According to a shy person, that person will say â I feel nice with Nobody around.â That never means that it likes to stay isolated but instead, like to be with you! You might be invisible, but not nonexistent. It is very different to feel that way, but again, it is the fact.

You are very tranquil, very peaceful, and very silent. I believe you must be bashful, and that is the reason why you stay so quiet. But being bold isnât a flaw. If you donât come out and show that you really are who is going to believe in your being?

When you will come out from the dark, you will see the light and youâll say â Nobody was nothing, and I am a body, an entity which can gleam through the darkest and enraged clouds just like the sun.â And when this entity will show up, the loneliness will flee forever.

So show out that you exist and you are a great friend and see how everyone will adore you. Be happy.

Yours lovingly,

Ray
