Poem for Valeriya

I see you peering, looking within

At the walls cold and yet smooth

Covered with organic pasty skin

Its solid lines and strength a sin

But you are draw to its power

To hold your heart deep within

You want to be free of its grasp

But every day you need its help

As you boldly take on lifeâs task

Without it a present canât endure

And to send a gift of love

Its safe arrival you would be unsure

It takes all that we as humans can give

As it travels a dangerous journey

To ensure at times others may live

Next time you hide behind your locks

Take a moment and dare to dream

About life without the humble Box!
