

I Have Looked Into the Part of You

I Have Looked Into the Part of You

By : Mistress of Word Play

I have looked into the part of you, which others never see, pushed back the barbs and indifference, the contempt you hold for me.

Published on Booksie

booksie.com/Mistress of Word Play

Copyright © Mistress of Word Play, 2015
Publish your writing on Booksie.com.

I Have Looked Into the Part of You

I have looked into the part of you,
which others never see,
pushed back the barbs and indifference,
the contempt you hold for me.

I have beheld the other person;
you've learned to hide him well,
in the self-inflicted prison,
that place where demons dwell.

Poor, tortured, distorted soul,
where from came your affliction?
You allow the nightmare to own you,
with such a firm conviction.

There are times I see the fear,
your temper and face cannot mask.
I would try my friend to help you.
All you have to do is but ask.

Could I but exorcise the terror,
push you back into the light,
perhaps the darkness would recede,
and you could win the fight.

I Have Looked Into the Part of You

I Have Looked Into the Part of You

Created from Booksie.com

Generated: 2015-03-02 20:53:16