people sneak disguises into songs of love they sing and it can be deceiving in the message it may bring be careful to interpret when you hear these songs of love for it may be a mockingbird that's cooing like a dove you must not be a dodo you must be a wise old owl a peacock may be pretty but their squawking is most foul so crane your neck as whooping is the rooster all a-crow there might be something up besides the sun, just so you know some acts are hard to swallow its a melody, off tune be it screeching of a hooter or the ravings of a loon there are pretty little warbles or a honk that's just plain wrong some will leave you all a-twitter with the promise of their song no one needs an albatross to decorate their neck a raven craves what's shiny and a chicken will just peck your heart, they might be robbin' so i'll leave you all with this the song that's most important is the language of their kiss
