WATER CLAIMS THE STARS

adrift upon an inky lake as still as wounded time the stars will blink like angels' winks in rhythms, so sublime

i gaze at the reflection of the stars upon the lake and watch the show with vertigo as patterned shapes, they take my eyes start playing tricks on me confusing downs and ups as if i roll, a weightless soul tween two revolving cups it's like acquiring heaven for a moment, more or less which coats my mind, which once was blind in visions, softly blessed the sky suggests no jealousy accepts things as they are the heavens, there, will kindly share when water claims the stars
