

Required

Required

By : roftaco

A poem about the realization of a seemingly impossible love. It's been a while since I wrote poetry, and I woke up at three am last night and cranked this one out in a little journal I hardly use but was thankful for at that point!

Published on Booksie

booksie.com/roftaco

Copyright © roftaco, 2015

Publish your writing on Booksie.com.

Requited

Can you hear me, screaming to your window?
Will you see me when Iâm standing here all alone?
I love the way you look right through me
I love you more than you could ever want me

Iâll pass the test, Iâll run the gauntlet for you baby
My thoughts occupied by your hallowed kiss
Iâll be there to catch you baby, catch the disease
Your loving is infectious, I just canât resist.

And when I go to sleep, our lips, they almost meet
Iâll wake up from this dream and find you next to me
Reality, it never meant that much to me
With you life has become a living fantasy

This love we share now, amor que compartimos
Feels like nothing could ever come between us
Iâll be yours baby, youâll be mine
Our love will mock the test of time
You hear that, Father Time?
I said this girl is mine
True love can never die
A feeling so divine

Required

Required

Created from Booksie.com

Generated: 2015-01-24 23:00:41