

A Snow White Death

By : SassySylist93

A poem that i came across cleaning my room recently. Its pretty old, but i thought that i would share it with you! Also pasted weird so i gave up on trying to fix the formats! Sorry! :)

Published on Booksie

booksie.com/SassySylist93

Copyright © SassySylist93, 2015
Publish your writing on Booksie.com.

A Snow White Death

Skin like ivory, she lay unmoving.
Embraced within walls of glass.
Audiences come and go,
to gaze upon the sleeping beauty.
Oh how dreadful,
for a radiant heart to fall
so young they cried.
Such a life wasted.
But alas from the shadows;
a young man;
the prince emerged.
A daring gaze iced to the core,
take a step forward.
A single gentle touch
among soft lips.
A new drawn breath.
Oh what radiant glory!
The lovely maiden
has at last awaken from slumber.
No eternity of such grief.
But perhaps, two halves
of a single heart, colliding into one.

A Snow White Death

A Snow White Death

Created from Booksie.com

Generated: 2015-01-27 18:00:50