

Anonymous Advice: Thursday, March 21

By : LiveLifeAdvice

The Anonymous Advice responses for Thursday, March 21! If you sent in any questions, look below for your response. A big thankyou to all of our fans and Booksie friends! - A

Published on Booksie

booksie.com/LiveLifeAdvice

Copyright © LiveLifeAdvice, 2015
Publish your writing on Booksie.com.

Anonymous Advice: Thursday, March 21

Every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday an entry will be posted answering all anonymous - and non-anonymous - questions that have been submitted to LiveLifeAdvice!

A big thankyou to all of our Booksie fans and friends. I am loving the turnout here! Hope that every one of you can benefit from the articles and advice that is and will be featured on this page, and hopefully you will submit your own questions for this weekends column!

Do you have anything to add to our response?
Comment below!

- A

~~~~~
~~~~~

Anon Asks: hi there,
I hope you can help me with this.
I am in a university that I do not really like, but I love that I have my friends there and, oh well, a crush.
However, I have applied to an exchange program where I can go study in the U.S and another program that takes students to Turkey. If I were to go, I can't really decide which program I should choose.
I don't know what's better, Turkey or the U.S.
what do you think?

I am also very reluctant about going because I'd really hate to lose my friends. they would eventually move on from me. and my crush? well If i left, then I'd never get the chance to know if we can work! what do I do?

Dear Anon: Create yourself a list of "Pros" and "Cons" about travelling to new countries to enroll in school. Leave the list for a day, and come back to read it with a refreshed mind to weigh the two sides! It is always hard to accept change in your life, especially when that change may mean that present friends and possible relationships have the chance of becoming a part of your past. Remember that any friend who is true will still be your friend when you return - and Facebook, Skype and international texting make it easy to stay in contact! Sometimes you need to think of what will make you the happiest in your future, despite the things that you need to temporarily sacrifice in the present. Think of the new friends you will make, the new places you will see, and the new cultures you will be exposed to! There is much to gain - that you can share with those you love right now when you reconnect! All the best,

- A

~~~~~
~~~~~

Anon Asks: I'm not sure if this is the type of question you usually look for but here it goes. I asked my boyfriend to my prom and he said yes. Sadly though he just contacted me yesterday and said he can't go. Without giving me any explanation as to why he can't go. We haven't really had a conversation in a few days now and I was wondering what I should do?

Dear Anon: It sounds like there is already a bit of space between you and your boyfriend. Ask him if you two can meet up to spend some time together without mentioning the Prom. If he seems reluctant, something deeper may be up. If not, casually ask him what's been going on in his life - maybe there's something out of his control that has caused him to either not want or not be able to go (such as money problems).

All in all, remember that Prom is a once in a lifetime experience! If you've set your heart on going, go no matter what. Even if it's just with a couple of girlfriends. You'll have a wonderful, memorable experience either way! Cheers,

- A

~~~~~
~~~~~

Anon Asks: Hi I'd like to ask if you have any tips for getting rid of acne? I know its gross. I hope you have something because it really makes me self conscous about my face, especially at school. Oh and I'm in middle school. I don't have a lot of money to buy like pro active - I'VE ASKED! :(

Dear Anon: I most definitely have a few tricks up my virtual sleeve that can help you out with unwanted acne! Firstly, when you start to feel a pimple or an outbreak coming on (a that tight, crusty feeling as your pores clog up), wash right away. If you have any facial scrub, use this, as it will get deep in to your skin and dig out anything that you don't want in there. When you actually have an annoying whitehead, try applying tooth -paste to it. Just a small dab will do. To avoid getting any further outbreaks, keep your face clean! Avoid oily makeups or using too much lotion. A great recipe for a cleansing facial mask - which is cheap and effective - can be found here:
<http://www.shensaddiction.com/2011/09/tea-tree-mask-soothe-acne-ridden-skin.html>
As well, steaming your face with a hot towel and then applying clear or white glue can act as a peel-mask once it dries!

I would also recommend making a Pinterest account, if you don't already have one! This is where I find many of my skin-care tips and tricks.
Best of luck,

- A

You can submit your questions and problems two different ways!

Anonymously: Send an e-mail to livelifeadvice@gmail.com to anonymously submit your question or advice. Your e-mail will not be stored or shared, and you will receive an e-mail reply when your question has been answered and posted!

Openly: Leave a comment below any Anonymous Advice entry and it will be answered the next post. Only FIVE questions are answered per entry, in no specific order or preference.

- A

Anonymous Advice: Thursday, March 21

Created from Booksie.com

Generated: 2015-01-25 17:51:20