

Revel in Rose

Revel in Rose

By : BloodyBlackRose

If you want to comment, please do so gently

Published on Booksie

booksie.com/BloodyBlackRose

Copyright © BloodyBlackRose, 2013
Publish your writing on Booksie.com.

Table of Contents

Revel in Rose Chapter 1

Revel in Rose Chapter 2

Revel in Rose Chapter 3

Revel in Rose Chapter 4

Revel in Rose Chapter 5

Revel in Rose Chapter 6

Revel in Rose Chapter 7

Revel in Rose : Chapter 1

What I am doing here is that I am effectively blogging my "diary" of sorts. Diary is in quotes because I never kept a book solely for that purpose, but all of the chapters in this novel are, I guess you could call them entries.

Chapter 2

I just came to the realization that all of my childhood dream jobs can be fulfilled by this one career path. Learning herbal medicine better allows me to help others, learning about nutrition would help me be somewhat of a chef, and becoming High Priestess of my coven would allow me to be in a teaching position.

Chapter 3

Still haven't started training for my trade yet, but I will next week though and I'm very excited about that. I have looked at the DSM entry regarding transsexualism, finding that it describes me almost perfectly (of course it would), and the WPATH SoC and realized that I would prefer to go the appropriate legal and medical channels (even though I have the knowledge to do the hormones myself) because I have seen too many incidences of people having major unintended reactions from self medicating and I do not wish to be another part of a statistic. But my scientific mind is trying hard to get the better of me. I have fantasized no less than 15 times about allowing for self-diagnosis and self-medication on a self-experimental basis, basically using myself as a test subject for determining the effects (if any) of phytoestrogenic and phytoantiandrogenic compounds on the ability to feminize someone like myself. I discovered through my research that phytochemistry, unlike botany, has very few job options.

Chapter 4

Beginning to feel conflicted about my seemingly contradictory ideals of doing the greatest good for the most people and seeing to it that those who would seek to harm others don't get the chance to. Can both co-exist or must I forsake one for the sake of the other? With regard to my transitioning, I still want to go the appropriate route, despite its many flaws...I am going to try to start on my 2nd day in trade classes, and if they make me leave, then so be it.

Chapter 5

2nd entry for today, although it should have been first. I found a site called dynamo . dictionary . com for learning words, it was a lot of fun and rather educational. The site estimates I know about 52,000 words, but I think that to be a gross underestimate. Luv Ya!

Chapter 6

I woke up after about three hours of strained sleep and got ready for class. I then made the mistake of going into the lobby where the RA refused to work with me and insisted I go back to sleep. I didn't want to, but I didn't want to get written up, so I went back to my room, heated up some water for ramen, and sat by the bathroom with the light on and the door open a bit so I wouldn't wake my room mates because I wanted to write. He probably will do a follow-up check and see that I am in fact, not in bed, so whatever happens from here, cheers to that. My schedule says NSO for today and I don't start trade until tomorrow; bummed a bit, but idc really because I know I'm going to do well anyway. xo

Chapter 7

My fantasies are getting stronger. When I first searched phytoestrogenic plants to learn about soy isoflavones, I swore I would never use my knowledge in my "quest" if you catch my meaning. And then I found myself searching for antiandrogenic plants with full intent to use what learned. When I saw green tea and licorice root on the list of phytoestrogenic/phytoantiandrogenic plants I thought to make a potion of sorts by adding licorice root extract to a cup of strong green tea with a bit of soy milk; I also thought to use red clover and white peony as an oil based combination. I would almost rather experiment with herbs myself and record results for other t-girls than allow others to suffer through this crisis on their own, because quality medical treatment is expensive and not easy for someone like me to find.

Created from Booksie.com

Generated: 2013-05-21 16:38:34